Dear Diary,
Wow! What an amazing day it's been.
Last night, there was the most horrendous storm.
I couldn't sleep due to the whistling wind and the heavy rain lashing against my window panes.
As soon as it was light, I rushed down to the beach in search of more curiosities. I walked across the familiar terrain and noticed a small landslide had occurred, revealing new rocks and minerals I had not explored before.
I darted over, taking care in case there were any more movements, and began brushing aside the loose mud and sand. You will never believe what I saw - it was the edge of a skull! I've never seen anything like it.
Just the tip of its nose was sticking out.
I quickly opened my bag to find my hammer and chisel and began work extracting my find.
All day, I've been working at it. I've managed to extract the rock from around what appears to be its body. It was so heavy, I had to ask some of the locals on the beach to help carry it back. They were all keen to help as they are as intrigued as I to find out what animal it may be.
For now, I need to rest my weary body, I am aching all over! Tomorrow, I will begin work uncovering more of this intriguing curiosity.
I cannot wait!

Night night.
